

Subject The Migraine Epidemic

Body Migraine has reached an epidemic scale. Yet migraine and headache disorders are still marginalized and grossly underfunded by public institutions around the world.

The Global Burden of Disease Study reported that migraine and headache are the world's second-largest disabler. That means migraine and headache has climbed into the top three of all disability-causing diseases, illnesses, and conditions.

Migraine is more common than asthma, epilepsy, and diabetes combined. Yet, it is the least funded neurological illness relative to its impact on disability.

Based on 2018 figures from the National Institute of Health, multiple sclerosis received 100 times more funding per patient than migraine.

This is a gross imbalance. Many would argue that this injustice perpetuates the widespread ignorance and stigma about migraine and headache disorders.

That's why we're proud to share the Migraine World Summit: the world's best-kept secret among knowledgeable and proactive migraine and headache patients.

The Migraine World Summit is for those who want to be informed about the latest breakthroughs and proven treatment strategies as well as the latest issues and advocacy efforts in the headache field.

The online Migraine World Summit is free from March 18-26, 2020.

The online event will feature 32 migraine and headache experts from leading institutions such as Stanford University School of Medicine, Harvard Medical School, and the Jefferson Headache Center.
